

To whom it may concern:

Despite the Conservative government's desire to deregulate and privatize much of what are essential public services, please safeguard the national public services such as Canada Post run by crown corporations for the good of all Canadians. It is essential that these be maintained if any sense of national identity and cohesiveness is to survive.

Please don't contribute to the further weakening of our nation. Public radio and television, a public airline, mail service, energy, health care, and utilities along with a national army are essential for a with a geography and history such as ours nation.

Witness the New Zealand experience in which they have recognized the error of deregulation and privatization and are having to buy back the national services.

Or witness some latin american countries that have underfunded and allowed ther postal system to deteriorate to the point that the only option is private service at astronomical rates which non but the wealthiest can afford.

This may be a result that members of our current minority government or even the postal review committee personally support, but it can not honestly be seen to be in the interest of the country or the majority of its population.

Totally 100% against the deregulation and sale of crown corporations and other public run services,

Douglas Reimer
